How Facebook Conquered The Internet Microsoft's latest Internet Explorer update, 9, does not support cookies. To prove it, Microsoft is creating a series of more than six dozen websites—various news sites, ESPN, even The New York Times—that you have to be logged into Facebook in order to use. Once you are on these sites, you're redirected to Facebook and logged out—forcing you to sign in again. How did Facebook get this far? It didn't start out as a social networking site. In 2004, Facebook was a 14-year-old Michigan high-school dropout who was smoking cigarettes, drinking beer, and playing video games in his mom's basement. His cofounder, Chris Hughes, had been the publisher of the Harvard Crimson, and had tried unsuccessfully to launch a webpage sharing service called ConnectU. In October 2003, a third
